Returning Alumnus Of 1943 Notes Interesting Changes On Stroll Around Campus In Spring Of '63

By CHARLES H. TUCKER

The Marshall alumnus returning to the campus after an absence of a few years is in for a lot of surprises. Those of my class — 1943 — who haven't been back since, will hardly know the place.

Expansion has been the theme at Marshall University for several years, and will be for many more to come.

The graduates of that mid-war year remember Marshall as located primarily between 16th and 17th streets and Third and College avenues. The Music Building, Laboratory School, and Hodges and Laidley Halls were at the far eastern end of the campus, with wide expanses of ground between them and the Gymnasium, Library and Student Union. The space was used mostly for intramural and athletic practice fields.

During Alumni Week this year, take a stroll eastward from the Library or old gymnasium. You will be amazed.

To your left is the magnificent Science Building constructed in 1951 and dwarfing its neighboring Library and Music Building. Straight ahead will be Lucy Prichard Hall, a women's dormitory built in 1955, and immediately in front you'll notice workmen busy on another women's dormitory scheduled for completion in July of 1964.

Walk on past the University Dining Hall, which was opened about the time we 1943ers left Marshall, and you will see another of Marshall's attractions, the large, modern Health and Physical Education Building. Surrounding it, and taking the rest of the block between 18th and 19th streets and Virginia and College avenues are expansive athletic fields.

As former residents of Laidley and Hodges halls will remember, that block once housed some rather run-down and old buildings. The expansion there is part of a master plan which will see Marshall eventually spread through the entire area to 20th Street.

Turn north to Fifth Avenue and you will see a former supermarket which has housed some of the Engineering Department and which in the future will be the site for new buildings. The site also provides some additional, needed parking space.

Turn west on Fifth Avenue a short distance and you will come to the new Residence Hall for men, just completed a couple of years ago. It fronts on Fifth Avenue and helps give Marshall even more of an attractive facade on the busy thoroughfare. As you go past the Laboratory School Annex, you will be at another imposing new structure, the Student Christian Center, also completed in the early 1960s.

These are only part of the changes you'll see in the old school, and many more are in the making.

The State Legislature paved the way this year for construction of a huge eight-story classroom and office building. Present plans call for it to be erected on the north-west campus near Old Main. The multi-million dollar facility will permit many classes to be moved from Old Main and the Music Buildings and will provide the latest in equipment.

Provided at the same time were funds for a much-needed addition to James E. Morrow Library. Also in the future are a new Student Union building and more additions and modernization.

This is only a short word-tour of the campus. As you stroll about it, there will be much more to make you proud of Marshall and its growth.

If you have some time to spare, or on your way in or out of Huntington on U. S. Route 60 east, you'll want to take a look at Marshall's University Heights campus. It's just east of the city and contains 184 acres. It once housed the state's industrial school for colored girls and later a home for the aged and infirm. The Legislature two years ago decided the home was no longer needed and, with great foresight, gave the land to Marshall.

There are many tentative plans for the ground, including a research center estimated to cost $9 million. Its benefits to Marshall and the area are practically limitless.

Thus far, two buildings on the extensive grounds are being converted to apartments for married students to replace the post-war, temporary buildings of Donald Court.

Yes, growth has been the watchword at Marshall. Through the fine direction of President Stewart H. Smith and his staff and faculty much more is in store.

Even though Marshall is well into its second century, it has been, and will be, a larger, better and more-influential school year by year.

Six Marshall People Have Posts in State Education

Six leading members of the State of West Virginia Department of Education are Marshall Graduates. They are William K. Hamilton, executive assistant state superintendent of Schools; R. Neil Chenoweth, supervisor, elementary schools; Warren King Parsons, director, veterans education; Donald J. Roberts, supervisor of publications; Evelyn Murray, educational consultant; and Laura Hinchman, supervisor of guidance, counseling, and testing.

Mr. Hamilton, executive assistant state superintendent of schools, was appointed to the position in June of 1961, after having been executive director of the state board of school finance since 1953.

He received his master's degree from Marshall in 1959, and carried out his doctoral study under a Kellogg Fellowship at the University of Kentucky between 1959 and 1962. He attended Morris Harvey College, 1950-'56, and obtained his bachelor's degree from Glenville State College in 1939. He is a graduate of Calhoun county high school, Grantsville.

Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton, who reside in South Charleston, are the parents of four children. Mrs. Hamilton, the former Audrey B. Winters, is a teacher in the Kanawha county schools.

Marshall Conducts Unique Study

Under the direction of Dr. Howard Leonard Mills, Professor of Botany, a group of four Marshall faculty members and three students spent 12 weeks last summer in the Florida Everglades, studying the effects of vegetation on the movement of battle troops, at the request of the U. S. Army.

According to Dr. Mills, the abortive attempt to invade Cuba might have ended differently if a study of vegetation had been made in Cuba's Pig's Bay area.

The assignment was to work on the development of a system for describing the earth's vegetation according to size and structure of plant growth.

Working with the U. S. Corps of Engineers Waterways Experiment Station at Vicksburg, Mississippi, Marshall's seven scientists staged an invasion of their own, on 7,000 square miles of steaming swampy Everglades of Florida, testing and developing a system of description basically initiated by Pierre Dansreau, a French scientist.

The Marshall Program for the project was accepted over the programs of other colleges and universities within a radius of three days' travel to the Everglades.

Once the collected data is processed and put in order, "What we have learned will be made available to the world," said Dr. Sam E. Clagg, Professor of Geography and Chairman of the Department.

Homecoming Will Be Nov. 9

Marshall University's 1963 Homecoming will be on November 9. It was originally set for October 19 but due to scarcity of football opponents for that date, the November 9 date was chosen.

The later date offers an outstanding grid opponent in Mid-American Champs Bowling Green University.

At the same time the Homecoming Commission, representing the Student Government and the Alumni Association, is planning a "bigger and better" Homecoming Program.

HOW ABOUT FOUR TIMES IN A ROW?

We have a good chance of going over the previous year's record in this Fourth Annual Giving Year if just a few more Alumni will respond with their Annual Gifts before June 30. This would be the fourth consecutive year of improvement.

By May 15, 1,360 Alumni had participated for a total of $11,776.52. Last year's grand total was $12,067 from 1,531 Alumni. Considering the fact that there are 15,000 Alumni on the mailing list, a new record should be a cinch! How about it? Have you? Will you??

Beazleys Will Go To Quito, Ecuador

Garnet Fitzhugh Beazley, Jr., who will receive his Ph.D. degree in economics from the University of Pittsburgh this spring, will be sent to Ecuador to aid in the establishment of the University of Pittsburgh's co-operative project in the capitol city of Quito.

Later in the summer Mr. Beazley will be joined by his family. His wife is the former Anne Brooke Toole, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. H. Gresham Toole, who was graduated from Marshall in 1954. They have three children.

Mr. Beazley, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Beazley of Huntington, received his B.S. degree from Marshall in 1954; an M.S. degree from the University of Pennsylvania in 1955; and the C.P.A. rating in 1957. He has taught accounting at Waynesburg College, Waynesburg, Pa., the past three years, and was an assistant professor at the University of Pittsburgh for five years.

Change At Marshall

Both the front and back cover pictures for this issue of the Marshall Alumnus present scenes that are indicative of change. With the arrival of May, the trees in the vicinity of Northcott Hall are almost in full leaf, bringing forth a welcome attractiveness after a long and bleak winter of severe cold. In Northcott Hall, well known to Marshall alumni for many years back, are classrooms for art, business, and home economics, and the offices of the education department.

Earlier in the spring, passing students and faculty members were attracted to the activity marking the driving of piling for the new women's dormitory. On the right we see the Marshall High School building, and on the left, in the background, a small portion of Lucy Prichard Hall, which will soon lose its place as the newest women's dormitory on the campus.

If you are in the Huntington area this Summer you may have the opportunity to attend the Marshall Speech Department productions of the comedy "Wedding Breakfast" on July 5 and 6 and "Hansel and Gretel" on July 12-13.
